He is, the Associated Press correspondent has good reason to believe, firmly committed to the new line of submarine policy in regard to passenger steamers, and is thoroughly convinced no more of them will be sunk, as he considers the measures now being taken adequate to prevent all possibility of accident or error. Submarine commanders have been instructed not only not to torpedo passenger steamers without warning them and giving passengers and crew an opportunity to escape unless the liners attempt to fight or run away when hailed, but also to adopt the safe course when there is the slightest doubt as to the intentions of the ship and not fire a torpedo unless absolutely convinced of a hostile intent.

reliable. Of course, naval protection involves problems different from the military, but so far as the army is concerned it seems to me that we must maintain a small standing army and give the masses of the people an opportunity for military training that shall prepare them to be readily available for the defense of the nation. Any such policy must be worked out carefully upon a voluntary basis, providing for equal opportunities for all. Any plan that is based upon professional distinctions or any other distinction that has resulted from special opportunities available to a few has a tendency to foster one of the evils of militarism—that is, military castes.

"Whenever those who join in military camps or military training must file applications stating their professions or callings, the officers in charge of this work are given a degree of discretion which will enable them to create and encourage undemocratic customs. The greatest protection against the dangers of militarism can be secured through making military training voluntary and as general as possible and through fostering in the citizens the best conception of their duties as American citizens.

miles south of Cape Henry and close to False Cape, and is towing her into Hampton roads.

The only thing the matter with the Edwin Hunt is a broken rudder head, which has made it impossible to steer her with the regular steering gear. Had there been an old-time master aboard some sort of a jury rudder would have been improvised, and the vessel would have proceeded under her own sails, probably at impeded speed, but still manageable.
